

Managing Receivables – Credit Monitoring & Control

By Peter Fong

Decide with Confidence

You take very good care of your fixed assets, machineries and vehicles for example, to ensure that they are in good condition. But, what about your receivables? Do you take as much care of them to ensure that they remain viable assets of the company?

The profits of a company are made not just from sales. Profits come also from the ability to minimize costs and prevent unnecessary losses, such as bad debts written off. Ironically, it can happen that the more a company sells, the less it makes. This will happen, for example, when the salespeople become very lenient and too generous in extending credit to new buyers to increase sales so as to enhance their commission earnings. And the result? An abnormally high level of bad debts later on.

Preventing losses arising from bad debts begins with ensuring credit is extended only to those who deserve it. Doing just this is, however, not quite enough. Credit once extended must also be well managed to ensure that the accounts do not deteriorate in quality, and if they do, to take early remedial actions.

Prevention is always better than cure. Take action early to minimize losses arising from defaulting customers.
