The Future of Learning and Development: Building a Sustainable Digital Learning Ecosystem

18th August 2021,
Wednesday,

3pm to 4pm.

Complimentary.

*Limited slots available.
Registration is required.*

COVID-19 has radically transformed learning and development and has become a catalyst for innovation and change within many organizations. Digital technologies, in particular, has played a vital role in enabling learning and development to continue to take place as organizations have started to embrace Virtual Instructor Led Trainings (VILT) as a stop-gap solution to in-person trainings during the course of the pandemic.

However, the challenge remains as to how do we ensure that learning and development is sustainable and effective in addressing the gaps in knowledge, skills, abilities and competencies required for employees to succeed in their roles. While shifting training programmes wholesale to a virtual environment may address certain training needs in the short-term, these are not necessarily adapted to suit the delivery methods required for specific employee groups.

Whether you are a learning and development professional, HR leader or team leader managing the training initiatives for your business unit, adopting a human-centred approach to learning has become key in achieving optimal training effectiveness for your employees.

In this webinar, we will be sharing on the recent trends in Learning and Development and how you could build a digital learning ecosystem for your organization to maximize long-term training ROI.

Key Learning Points

By the end of the session, you will learn:

- Recent trends and developments in learning and development
- Building a digital learning ecosystem within your organization
- How to adopt different training strategies according to your organizational structure and culture
- Different types of digital learning strategies such as scenario-based learning, learning-to-reinforcement, micro-learning and gamification
- How to embark on a digital learning journey for your organization
